

Ten Art and Photography Projects That Perfectly Captured Life in 2020

ART & PHOTOGRAPHY / ANOTHER LIST

Photography by Devin Doyle

This year has been seismic and monumental, serving us a pandemic, global unrest, and numerous political shakeups. Here, we round up the artists and photographers who captured it best

DECEMBER 30, 2020

TEXT Dominique Sisley

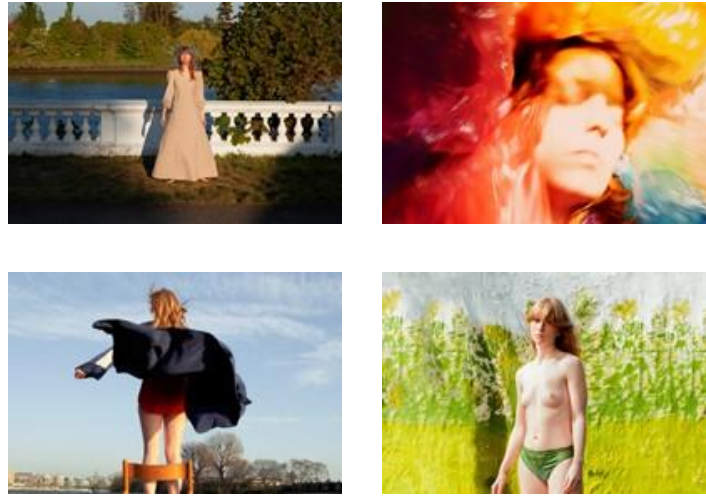

Earlier this year, Another invited nine photographers – including Brianna Capozzi, Laura Coulson and Dougie Irvine – to document their lives under lockdown. Each week, for ten weeks, they sent us an image that encapsulated their experiences during the pandemic, ranging from webcam screenshots to spontaneous street photography.

Photography by Laura Coulson

Seesaw by Bex Day

When her usual work was paused during the pandemic, London photographer Bex Day turned the camera on herself. The resulting series of self-portraits became a new

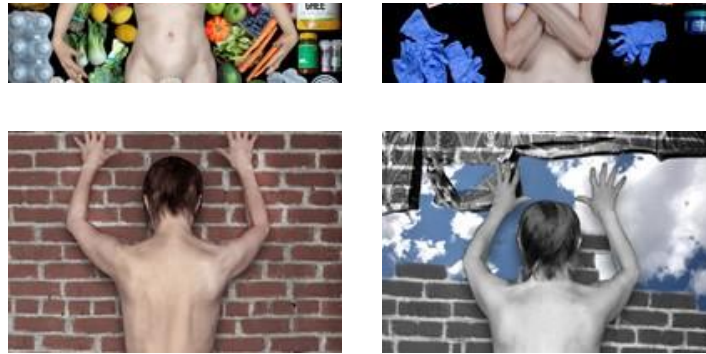

GALLERY / 10 IMAGES

Seesaw by Bex Day

My Body In A Box* by Penny Slinger

British artist Penny Slinger put her own surreal spin on the pandemic this year, creating a series of photomontages of her naked body trapped in a variety of different boxes. The project, simply titled My Body In A Box, was an attempt to “to explore the psychological entrapment and fears” that can be caused by a pandemic.

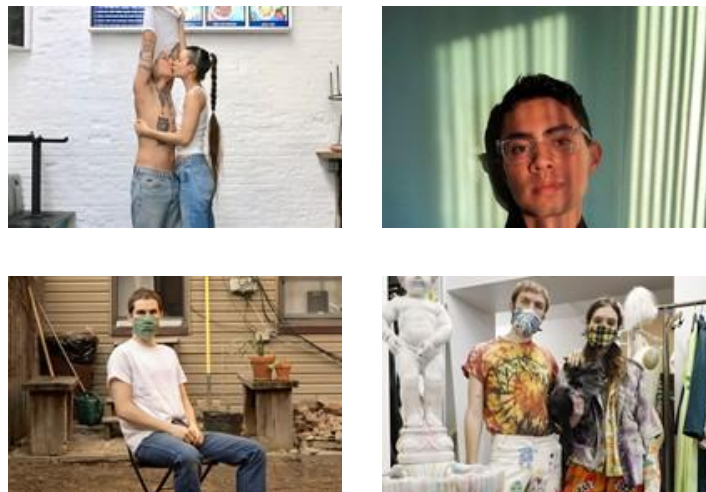

GALLERY / 12 IMAGES

My Body in a Box by Penny Slinger

This Immediate Life

Earlier this year, conceptual arts collective This Immediate Life began inviting people to send in their lockdown self-portraits. Submissions swiftly poured in from all over the world, with creatives from the US, Europe and Asia sending in their responses. “We wanted to create something positive, uplifting, and collaborative,” the collective told AnOther earlier this year.

GALLERY / 13 IMAGES